BULLETIN No. 44

THE TRAIL RIDE OF 1936

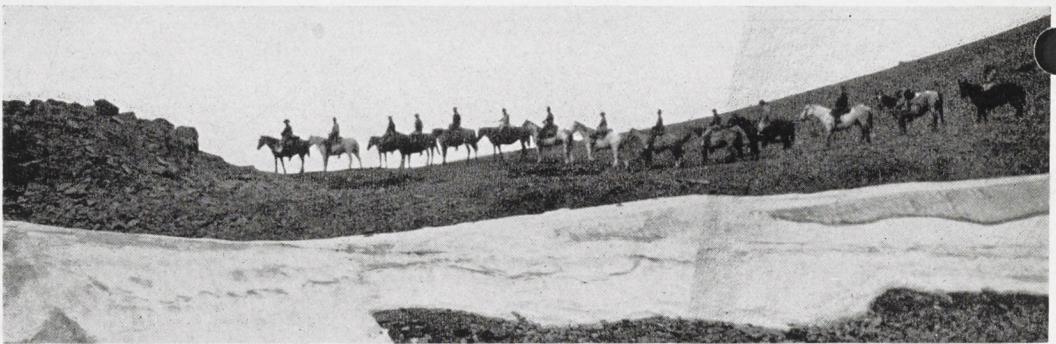

by Joseph MacGahern

"It is one of the many absurdities of human nature," Voltaire once wrote, "that most of mankind must perforce put a purpose to their pleasures or else feel guilty enjoying them."

Perhaps it was the race-memory of this concept working in my subconscious mind that kept me, for many years, from really enjoying riding. I had ridden much, to be sure, but generally for a purpose. The purpose of crossing a stretch of tropical jungle to reach the big-game country... the purpose of photographing an aboriginal tiger dance... the purpose of getting inland as quickly as possible to untouched fishing waters... even the purpose of getting from a jungle camp to the nearest cantina to get hilariously drunk.

Photographs taken on the 1936 Official Trail Ride and submitted in the Contest for the Reginald Townsend Cup should be sent under a nom de plume with the name of the photographer in a separate sealed envelope, both to be addressed to J. M. Gibbon, Room 324, Windsor Station, Montreal. Adjudication will be made by three Judges, none of whom will be Trail Riders.

Closing date for entries will be March 1st, 1937.

Route of Trail Ride — July 31 - August 4 — 1936

The realization of how much a Puritan I had been in regard to riding came home forcibly to me one night last winter when, stiff and sore from a long day in a Mexican saddle under a blazing sun, squatting around a dismal camp fire of mesquite while attempting to quell a ravenous appetite with soggy tortillas, a companion said to me in response to my complaints, "Why don't you take a ride sometime for pleasure? Forget hunting, fishing, photographing voodoo doctors. Just get in the saddle and ride for the fun of it."

Through my mind passed visions of the Trail Riders of The Canadian Rockies, an organization with which I was familiar only by means of photographs and publicity "releases." For years, numerous photographs and stories of the Trail Riders had passed over my desk. I recalled how I often paused over an appealing photo showing, perhaps a string of horses and riders disappearing over a pass, or a group gathered around for chuck. I recalled how many times I said to myself, "Next year I'll make that ride."

The camp fire died out; my companions withdrew to their sleeping bags; eventually even the mozos sought the warmth of their zepapes. But I dreamed on... dreamed of Banff, Lake Louise, where I had spent so many enjoyable days; the Yoho Valley; and how wonderful it must be to leave the hotels and resorts behind and go into those magnificent mountains on horse-back.

Thus it was that a casual camp fire conversation plus the memory of half a hundred photographs caused me to vow that night, deep in the heart of Tamaulipas, that I would join the Trail Riders for their 1936 ride, and for once in my life, hit the trail with no other purpose than to enjoy riding and to admire nature's handiwork in creating mountain peaks, valleys, lakes and streams.

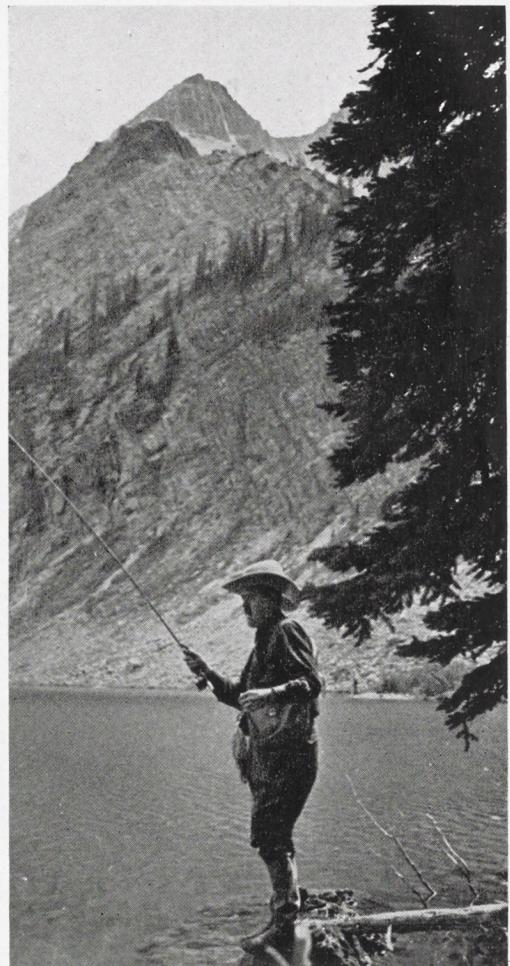

When the bus left Banff Springs Hotel, early on the morning of July thirty-first, 1936, I crowded in and embarked on my first Trail Ride.

At the corral all was confusion, the delightful confusion of fifty-seven people sorting their duffle, hand-luggage, selecting horses, trying saddles, adjusting stirrups - and taking pictures! Rather lost in the melee I was eventually rescued by Ed Ogan who looked me over with a gruff, "We'll need a big horse for you, all right," and then rounded up a big wall-eyed pinto on which I was soon seated. (One nice thing about weighing 210 pounds, no one ever argues with you over a horse.)

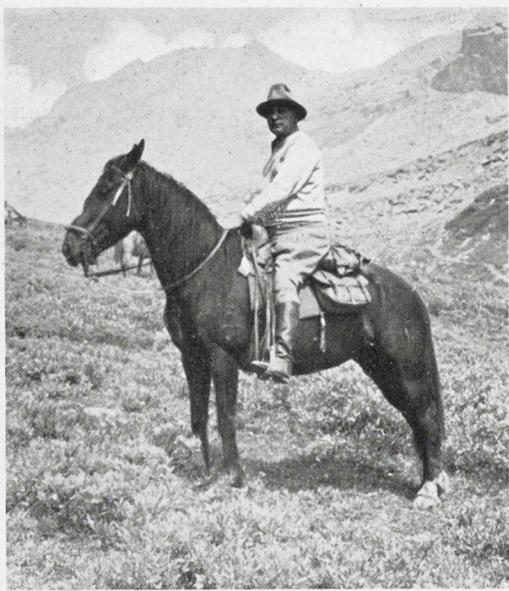

Personalities of the ride soon began to distinguish themselves. The young man in bright plaid shirt, set off with a conch belt, I learned was George Vaux, the president of the Trail Riders. Dan McCowan also proved helpful with suggestions.

Soon our leader, George Vaux, gave the signal and the Trail Riders started across the road, through the brush, and into the wilderness. The great adventure, our first trail ride, began for thirty of us.

With Mount Edith and Mount Louis jutting the cloud-flecked sky above, we gaily started down the trail following Forty Mile Creek. The first half day was spent, I presume, in adjusting ourselves to our saddles, in becoming acquainted with our horses, and attempting to "size up" the various members of the party.

R. H. Palenske, our new President

That first morning the trail followed Forty Mile Creek, and revealed beautiful scenery and many "perfect" trout pools. More than once I longed to stop and throw a fly into one of them; they were made to order for the inept fisherman, with no brush around to catch the fly.

Noon found us at a pleasant meadow along the creek, where we enjoyed our first lunch. The boys soon had big washboilers of coffee and tea placed over the camp fire, and Mrs. Claude Brewster was busy handing out sandwiches and fruit.

The pause was welcomed by us, particularly those who had not hardened up by preliminary riding. What a relief to walk around and stretch those muscles! This noon hour was also the first opportunity to become acquainted with our fellow riders; and the first friendships of the ride were struck up.

Again George Vaux called us into line, and our party proceeded. During the afternoon we forded Forty Mile Creek several times, and traversed glens that only the word "sylvan" can describe. The profusion of flowers about the trail made us long for the learning of Dan McCowan, with each one asking his neighbor, "What flower is that?"

Rather early in the afternoon, about four o'clock, we could see our camp in the distance, at the foot of a long decline, nestling on the banks of swift rushing Forty Mile Creek. The tepees stood out among the trees, smoke curled leisurely into the still air, inviting us all to our first night's camp.

At the corral, wranglers were busy unsaddling the horses as they came in, sorting saddles, while others were busy with the mysterious and romantic activities that dudes from the East find in the work of cowboys.

Spruce boughs were piled before each tent, and the first job that my tent mate, Frank Fitzpatrick of The Sportsman magazine, and myself undertook was to bed ourselves down for the night. Ed Ogan, seemingly always at hand when you are in difficulties, stepped forward and gave us our first lesson in placing the boughs to make a comfortable bed.

Supper was soon announced by the well-known shout from the cook's tent, "Come and get it," and we took his cry literally, because most of us came as rapidly as our stiffened legs would permit, and we certainly "took it," as Mr. and Mrs. Claude Brewster passed out the piping hot dishes. As a dramatic denouement, there, in the heart of the wilderness, beside a glacier stream, hemmed in by snow-capped mountain peaks, we were served with—an apple pie as crunchingly delicious as I've ever tasted! (The next day we had fresh cakes, with frosting and all. In fact, the cooks apparently tried repeatedly to surprise us "off our feet.") I got to the point where even a Thermidor wouldn't have surprised me.)

When the inner needs had been satisfied, in my instance only too well, a pleasant half hour of conversation with companion riders beside a crackling camp fire served to bring the various members of our party into closer contact and sharper focus. Each had some distinguishing mark - a conch belt, a big hat, an Indian coat, etc. Questions were asked, "Who is that over there with the buckskin shirt?" And: "Who is the dazzlingly, beautiful girl in jhodpurs?"

Soon John Murray Gibbon, our secretary-treasurer, who had been moving in and out among the gathered riders with the dignity of the Panchan Lama, quietly directing matters, seated himself at the portable organ, and, with his accompaniment, we broke into "The Daring Young Man on The Flying Cayuse."

Later, that old rascal of comedy, Travis Coleman, took the center of the camp fire, and convulsed us with his Russian wrestling "act"; following which, as an encore, he skipped over to the Chinese dialect, and rang the bell again with a monologue that should be preserved in these records of the Trail Riders.

The finale to - what phrase is the equivalent to "floorshow" when applied to a camp fire in the wilderness? At any rate, the finale to our entertainment, shall we call it, came when George Vaux called upon Colonel Phil Moore for an "interlude."

To begin with, the setting was perfect. The sun had set; darkness had fallen; the fire burned brightly, casting romantic shadows through the darkness, fitfully illuminating the Indian tepees and the pines, while from the distance came the faint tinkling of bells from the grazing horses.

Into this setting, then, stepped a wiry gentleman, in buckskin shirt, the lineaments of whose face, as the fire blazed up intermittently, revealed a personality to which wide experience had brought that mellow cynicism Anatole France has described as the essence of a true gentleman of the world.

I have heard some of the world's most famous raconteurs hold forth. James Huneker was hard to surpass, and Frank Harris told a story as no one else could, before or since. But Colonel Moore has something of his own, something as original and definite, and equally hard to describe.

Harry Richmond is the world's greatest master of ceremonies. In New York or Hollywood, when a night-club is sinking fast, financially, they call Harry in - and make plans for retiring to an estate in the blue-grass. I'd like to place the Colonel under contract - at fifty per cent of the net - to go to the Great White Way and show the boys what a real master of ceremonies can do. Throughout the ride, the "appearances" of Colonel Moore saw a packed "house" about glowing embers.

Dan McCowan, who might be called the John Burroughs of the Canadian Rockies, proved highly interesting in his remarks on the flowers and name places of the country through which we were passing.

We were fortunate in having another artist with us - George Fisher, the cowboy singer and yodler, who gave us daily concerts of "rhythm on the range." George's tour-de-force was called "Alimony," and recounted the sad tale of a cowboy who married the "wrong woman." This was the number most called for by the riders, particularly the ladies, and many of us pondered the reason for this. Was there, perhaps, some of our party who were seeking the solace of the mountains from an unfortunate love affair? Such conjectures, of course, add interest, if not illumination.

Only too soon did tired muscles and cold air cause us to forsake the camp fire for our sleeping bags, but only after we had been warmed and fortified against the rigors of the night by steaming hot chocolate and doughnuts - another surprise from the cook's tent.

Cozy and warm we found our tents, and from the breakfast conversation the next morning, evidently all of us "hadn't had such a good sleep in months." Whether it was the sound rest or the mountain air, we all had excellent appetites the next morning, and pile after pile of cakes disappeared from the table.

The second day of the ride we remained over at the first camp, which is customary with the Trail Riders, perhaps to give the dudes a day of rest. But none of us got any rest that second day, because directly after breakfast it was announced that Mystic Lake was only three miles away and a party was formed to journey there. Many took fishing tackle, as good fishing was promised. About nine-thirty we were on the trail. A short distance from Mystic Lake another trail branched off, going to a "pass," the name of which I never did learn. The larger number of the party took this trip, while fifteen or twenty of us went to Mystic Lake. We found the fishing good - the fishermen being Miss Bates, Mr. and Mrs. Bardwell, Dr. Prowd, and the writer.

The third day dawned clear and bright – in fact, each of the five days on the trail was perfect – and by nine o'clock we were under way, thanks to the wranglers who had started rounding up the horses at four o'clock. A small contingent, the so-called fishermen, started a bit earlier than the others, as it was announced that we would stop at Sawback Lake for lunch, and the fishermen wanted to be there early to have a nice mess of trout for noon lunch.

Alas! our luck of the previous day had deserted us, and the lads and lassies who planned on trout for lunch were sadly disappointed. But any disappointment they may have had must have vanished immediately, because the approach to Sawback Lake, and the lake itself, was one of the most impressive sights of the ride. It was impressive in a macabre sense, I suppose a true nature lover would tell us, because through this area the ravages of fire has created desolation. Approaching Sawback Lake we came down a steep cliff, which was entirely bare of growing trees, only the whitish trunks of those burned long ago extended their height into the sky like skeletons. The brilliant fire-weed, covering the ground like a carpet, accentuated the whiteness and skeleton-like quality of the ruined trees.

That night we encamped at the base of Block Mountain, which rears itself precipitously from the boulder-encrusted banks of Cascade Creek, to a height of over 9600 feet. In many respects, this was the most beautiful of the three camp-sites; certainly, it was the most hemmed-in, giving one the impression of impassable barriers in every direction.

The fourth day was the climax of the ride, although it was by far the shortest. Leaving the Block Mountain Camp, we began to climb rapidly, as we approached Badger Pass. Ascents that seemed almost perpendicular when we saw the riders ahead, were easily climbed by our sure-footed horses. All morning we seemed to climb, climb. And then about noon we reached a vast mountain meadow, high up on the pass, just before the trail starts the sharp incline to go over the summit of the pass itself. The meadow was enclosed on all sides by gradually sloping mountain walls, forming a vast natural amphitheatre three or four miles in length and about two miles in width. In this magnificent amphitheatre, where one could easily imagine the Last Judgment taking place – it was so vast, so weird, so unearthly – we paused for the mundane task of eating lunch.

Rest by the Creek

I am sure that most of the riders felt the emotional value of that scene, the overwhelming impact of nature that emanated from those acres of stone, fringed with snow, the sense of nature's munificence and immutability, that causes to snap within one those stultifying complexes that the egoism of modern life engenders.

For the pass itself and the magnificent expanse down the valley of Johnson Creek once the summit was attained — it is idle for me to attempt to make typewriter keys hammer out a sketch of this, as only music could express its grandeur. There, the riders paused on their horses, silhouetted against the sky that awe-inspiring view ahead — the impact was a personal one, and that moment's reverie brought to each of us a powerful segment of life at its heights, which goes so deep, touches so many hidden springs, that its nature must be more like a prayer than anything else.

There, on the summit of Badger Pass, the lines of Walt Whitman kept running through my mind:

"Here a great personal deed had room...
Now I know the secret of the making of great persons;
It is to live and die in the open air."

From our third camp-site on Johnson Creek the trail for the last day of our ride took us down the heavily wooded Johnson Creek Valley. All day on the trail we could feel ourselves going down, down, although there were several steep climbs before we reached Hillsdale Corral, the end of our five days of carefree riding.

We rode into Hillsdale with banners flying, a fortunate trip behind us, no accidents, no bad weather, nothing but sunny, happy days to remember. The Pow Wow, held in the big tent, served as a fitting climax to the ride. We gathered about the circle, we sang the songs we had sung together back in the mountains, but perhaps with a touch of melancholy because we knew that tomorrow would see our "bunch" dispersed, for another year at least, perhaps forever for some of us.

We were returning to civilization and all its problems, to the pettiness of congested areas; but we were returning to it with greater courage than we had left it, because no one can come face to face with the profound inspiration of nature, as we had, and not come out of it reconfirmed in the joy of living.

(Kindly advise the Secretary-Treasurer of any misspelt names or incorrect addresses)

In order to keep pace with the expense of issuing these bulletins, members who have not yet paid their annual dues for the year 1935 are requested to send their cheques to J. M. Gibbon, Secretary-Treasurer, Room 324, Windsor Station, Montreal, Canada. At the Annual Pow-Wow, Section 6 of Article 6 of the By-Laws was amended to read as follows:

"Members holding qualification of 500 miles and upwards may compound their paid and future annual dues by payment of $25.00, which shall absolve them from further payment of annual dues, and granted a Life Membership Certificate upon the additional payment of $1.00, but shall not exempt them from special dues or assessments, should such be considered necessary."

Members desiring to take advantage of this new by-law should communicate with the Secretary-Treasurer, who will advise the balance of dues payable for such Life Membership Certificate.
